

Industrial Development Sustainability (IDS)

Subjects: Social Issues

Contributor: Haoxuan Yu

Industrial Development Sustainability (IDS) is the Standard for choosing the reasonable road of industrial development for the Nation.

Keywords: Sustainability ; Industrial Development ; Nation

The definition of Industrial Development Sustainability (IDS):

- Industrial Development Sustainability (IDS) is the Standard for choosing the reasonable road of industrial development for the Nation.
- Industrial Development Sustainability (IDS) advocates a balanced industrial development of the Nation, and it can be adjusted accordingly in some special circumstances, but it requires that the Nation should not unbalance its industrial structure.
- Industrial Development Sustainability (IDS) requires the Nation to develop industry mainly to pave the way for future industrial development, and not to leave hidden dangers for future industrial development.
- Industrial Development Sustainability (IDS) advocates that the industrial development of the country should be people-oriented, the interests of the people are the most important.
- And Industrial Development Sustainability (IDS) requires the Nation consider the following factors to develop the industry, that is, 1. The Conditions of the Nation. 2. The Industrial Structure of the Nation. 3. The Future Direction of Industrial Development of the Nation. 4. The Economic Development of the Nation. 5. The Quality the People's life. 6. The Potential War.

